Your product liability claim

As consumers, we often find there can be design defects or other manufacturing defects across the many consumer industries. Retailers, manufacturers, wholesalers and even distributors can play a role in these kinds of cases. Dangerous products can lead to dangerous results. For instance, there are numerous instances where medical devices contain a manufacturing or design defect that carries critical or life-threatening outcomes. Similarly, prescription drugs can have very serious side effects for users. If medications do not contain sufficient warnings about side effects, or if the user is given an incorrect dosage, there can be very critical consequences.

It is important to reach out to a personal injury attorney with the skill and experience in product liability law, as well as cases where strict liability applies, so you can investigate all claims available to you in order to receive compensation for your injury. In some instances, you may be able to receive punitive damages as well. Product liability claims can be complex and may require the hiring of expert witnesses to review and offer opinions on the facts of your case. Our attorneys have experience locating and working with the best experts out there.

One reason these cases are so important are that not only do you deserve compensation for your injuries, but a defective product can harm others, and by bringing your product liability case, you can help make change.

While these can come from large companies, you still have a voice and can seek compensation. Our attorneys offer a free evaluation of your injury claim. It is important to reach out as soon as possible to a product liability and personal injury attorney so they can do a comprehensive review of the facts of your case and relevant medical records and medical bills.
