Delivering justice for sex trafficking victims through legislation

We are proud of our firm's results in sex trafficking cases, and ways we have provided justice for our clients and for the community more broadly.

Our client, Yvonne Ambrose, had the heartbreaking experience of having her teenage daughter, Desiree Robinson, become a victim of sex trafficking and later murdered on Christmas Eve 2016. Yvonne dedicated herself not only to justice for Desiree, but also to do everything she could to prevent other young victims and their families from suffering. The attorneys at Romanucci & Blandin advocated for change with her, and along with others, testified before a United States Senate Committee examining sex trafficking the role of the internet. Our team's fierce dedication was a contributing factor to the passage of the federal SESTA/FOSTA law, which reformed the solicitation of minors on the internet. Yvonne and our attorneys, Gina DeBoni and Bhavani Raveendran, were present in the White House when the bill was signed into law. Furthermore, the activity on this case also contributed to the shutdown of the website Backpage.com, which was notorious for its solicitation of minors.
